Human Body & Environmental Feng Shui

What is the origin of human being? It's really a big question that scientists are still working on it. How does the human body survive in the universe? There exists to certain extent the matter of Harmonization of Human Body with the Nature. Once the nature changes, our body will certainly be affected, such as the "Global Warming Effect".

"Qi (氣)" is the energy from nature. It is the breath essential to maintain environmental, physical and emotional balance. Each of us possess "Qi (氣)". Its characteristics and the way in which it moves differ from person to person.

There are three different kinds of "Qi (氣)":-

1. One that circulates in the atmosphere, as when a pathway meanders through a garden;
2. One that circulates in the ground, as when a river winds gently across a landscape; and
3. One that circulates within our body, as when a "Tai Ji (太極)" master executes his move in an unhurried manner.

Wind currents carry energy into the house. This energy will be auspicious if the flow is slow and meandering.

A straight and rapid flow of “Qi (氣)” carries “Sha Qi (煞氣), that is destructive energy.

Thus avoidance to have too many sharp corners as they will act as obstacles to this flow of Sheng Qi (生氣) and prevent you from attaining your goals in life.

Good Feng Shui can bring good health, harmonious relations and prosperity to the occupants of the home. It also harnesses and enhances environmental “Qi (氣)” to improve the flow of “Qi (氣)” within our bodies, thus improving our life.
