

International Feng Shui Federation

國際風水專業學會

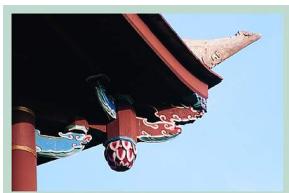

Purpose of Feng Shui (Chinese Geomancy)

The laws of Feng Shui are used to differentiate between auspicious and inauspicious land sites, and they provide instructions for positioning homes and designing room layouts in ways that promise to enhance the quality of their owners' lives in surprising and dramatic ways.

In the family home, good Feng Shui positioning creates harmonious relationships amongst family members, fosters good health, attracts abundance and prosperity, and helps build good reputations.

In business, observing Good Feng Shui rules in the selection and design of your premises is a sound way of creating opportunities for growth, raising your business profile and your standing in the community, attracting customers, raising profits and expanding turnover. Good morale amongst staff will be established, employees will stay loyal and a pervasive aura of goodwill will create smooth working relationships.

By contrast, Bad Feng Shui brings illness and disaster, accidents and financial loss. Bad Feng Shui causes opportunities to slip away, careers to fade, wealth to be squandered, and reputations to collapse. Bad Feng Shui also causes grave unhappiness, and sometimes even results in tragic consequences for the family and its well being.

The ancient science of Feng Shui can create advantageous results when applied to modern interior design and fitting-out works. Making small adjustments to your room layouts following Feng Shui guidelines can improve your family relationships.

Feng Shui enables you to organize your home to facilitate energy movement and avoid energy clustering or energy acceleration within the house. You can trap constructive energy “Sheng Qi (生氣)” and disperse, disrupt or remove destructive energies “Sha Qi (煞氣)”

Good Feng Shui can bring good health, harmonious relations and prosperity to the occupants of the residential house, offices and factories. It also harnesses and enhances environmental energy “Qi” to improve the flow of energy flux “Qi” within our human bodies, thus improving our life.

In business premises, Good Feng Shui creates opportunities for business growth and profit-making. On the contrary, Bad Feng Shui features create disharmony and loss of opportunities. Bad Feng Shui can even lead to tragic consequences.

The Purpose of a Feng Shui Analysis and its Application is to:-

1. select a prosperous site for a house or building;
2. select the best orientation for a building;
3. select the best unit within an apartment block;
4. discover the energy relating to the specific birth data and elements of each occupants, and select appropriate rooms for everyone;
5. discover the movements of both constructive energies “Sheng Qi (生氣)”, and destructive energies “Sha Qi (煞氣)” through our house

6. make the best decisions in interior design and fitting-out works;
7. maintain long term prosperity through regular check and Feng Shui adjustment; and
8. forecast any cyclical changes in the environment.

Modern Usage of Feng Shui

Architects in Sydney and Hong Kong were surveyed by researchers regarding their selection of the environment for a building and interior layout. The architects generally concurred with the ideal feng shui model.

The hospitality industry has documented the expensive retrofits members must undertake when accommodations were not designed with feng shui principles in mind.

Donald Trump and Britain's Prince Charles have used feng shui.

News Corporation consulted feng shui experts regarding the headquarters offices of DirecTV after News Corp. acquired that company in 2003. It has also recently been included in the Lockie Leonard TV series.

